OLD MINDSET

THE UNIVERSE AS A DEAD SYSTEM

The universe is a barren and inhospitable place, which almost exclusively consists of non-living matter and empty space. Life is extremely rare.

On earth, the matter has somehow organized itself in a complex way, so that living units have occurred. But if you look at the universe as one; the human undertaking is a negligible exception. Our existence as humans seems meaningless and without purpose – a cosmic coincidence that will be forgotten. A dead universe has no memory and tells no tales. When the body dies, the lights go off and we disappear without any trace or remains, both physical and non-physical. What matters then are material possessions, material power, material pleasure and material prestige.

NEW MINDSET

THE UNIVERSE AS A LIVING SYSTEM

This gives us a universe full of invisible energy and life; designed for patient emergence of a comprehensive, cosmic garden. Inside such a paradigm, we humans, as a conscious lifeform in the unit, will be highly valuable. Through us, the universe sees, knows, feels, and learns. The matter is not always what's most important, but the things that are invisible – the deeply living inside us, in our connections and in the world around us.
